Students protest library hours

by Gil McGowan

In an effort to preserve the quality of their education, students from all over campus staged a "study-in" Tuesday night to protest the administration's decision to reduce library hours.

Following the lead of Student Union organizers, students began to gather in Rutherford library (North) at nine o'clock.

By ten o'clock -- the time when the library was supposed to close under the new schedule but two hours before last year's closing time -- student's had filled almost all the study spaces on all of Rutherford's five floors.

There were so many students, in fact, that dozens were forced to study in the stairwells and lounge areas.

In all, about 450 students came through the library's doors between nine and ten, adding to the numerous students who had gathered before that time.

The Student's Union organized the protest in order to let the administration know that students are dissatisfied with the reduction in library hours.

Of the hundreds of students who attended the "study-in" most did not hesitate to voice their opinions.

"I think it's ridiculous that we pay $69 per term for library and computing fees yet they reduce the library hours by over 20 hours per week," said Stefanie Madison, a fourth year sciences student.

Other students were willing to accept reduced library hours but only if the changes were made with needs of students in mind.

"There's always going to be a greater demand than the supply of money. But, if they have to sut a few hours of library time, they should go to the students to tell them where," said Lonny MacLean, a fourth year Arts student.

The SU was also upset that elected student representatives had not been involved in the decision-making process. By demonstrating, the SU hoped to ensure that this kind of process would never be employed again.

"We needed to prove a point," said SU president Suresh Mustapha.

"We needed to prove that students were, indeed, concerned about the reduction in hours and it wasn't just the Student's Union speaking."

Mustapha was satisfied with the attendance at the demonstration and hoped that it would prompt the administration to take quick remedial action.

"It's fine to talk about alternatives for January, but we need something happening right now because we have a critical shortage of study space and mid-terms will be starting in two or three weeks," he said.

Chief Librarian Ernie Ingles was also impressed by the turnout for the demonstration and promised to take the students' message to heart.

"I'm absolutely delighted that the students are here," he said. "My only regret is that I ordered coffee and donuts for everybody and it hasn't shown up yet."

After meeting with representatives from the SU Monday afternoon, Ingles and University vice-president for student and academic services Lois Stanford agreed to extend hours in Cameron library to midnight on weeknights. They also agreed to consider other alternatives such as extending weekend hours and staggering operating hours in the two main libraries, Cameron and Rutherford, so that at least one library would be open late and on weekends.

Mustapha is pleased with the promised changes but he hopes that more can be done to ensure extended access to quality study space.

"It's a major success, but it's not enough."

Mustapha said that negotiations over library hours will have to continue at least until the SU has had a chance to compile the results from a library-user survey that it circulated at the demonstration. Once this information has been gathered, the SU will be able to tell the administration where and when students study.

In the meantime, Mustapha wants to encourage changes in the campus bureaucracy that would ensure that future changes in library hours have the approval of elected student representatives.

Towards this end, Mustapha plans to introduce a motion to the General Faculties Council (GFC) asking that all future changes to library hours be approved by the GFC or the GFC executive -- two governing bodies that include elected student representatives.

Uncertainty over decline

by Lee Craig

Preliminary figures show that university enrollment is down 1.4% in total, with a noticeable decline in the faculties of Arts and Science and a slight increase in the faculty of Education.

Peter Meekison, up academic believes the numbers are fairly close to what the final figures will be in December, when the university presents their budget to the government. Any change would occur because of last minute course changes or withdrawals.

Of the reasons why the numbers are dropping Meekison said, "We are unsure at present why the decline is occurring, however it is possible that the policies we have instilled have affected enrollment. Until we look into it further, we won't know for sure, although one possible reason is that enrollment is leveling off, as the Department of Advanced Education predicted."

Regarding the increase in education, Meekison said, "We really do not know for certain at present. I would suggest it is because of an increased demand for teachers."

Meekison added that studies will be done, to see where the decrease is predominently from, either with new students entering university for the first time or transfer students from other educational institutions. He pointed out that a key factor in next year's budget is to predict the numbers of students that will be in university.

The University's Board of Governors set a goal last year of 24,000 for overall enrollment by 1994-95. According to Brian Silzer, associate up and Registrar, this would mean a decrease of approximately 400 students a year, which in total is 1600 over four years.

"Circumstances within the university, as well as outside, have and will affect enrollment. One possibility is that enrollment has peaked, as has been forecasted for several years by government agencies. This would involve the general aging of the population as baby boomers and their children get older. During periods of slower economic growth, as in the late 80's, people came back to school to upgrade their education. Perhaps this is now easing off," Silzer said, "As well, some university policies, such as raising the minimum transfer GPA for out of province transfer sutdents have had an effect."

However, Silzer also pointed out that quotas in the faculties of Arts, Science and Education will not be in effect until 1991-92.

"as quotas do no come into effect until 1991-92, we were instructed this year to maintain the status quo, the same enrollment as last year. By doing this, we are giving students advanced warning for when the quotas do come into effect."

Silzer further stated that although students in Arts, for example, with a 70% average, had to wait until other applications with a higher average were processed this year, these students did eventually get in.

Jason Forth, SL vp academic disagrees with Silzer, over whether the present system is a fa... is very obvious that an ... cap is a quota. If more ... a 73% average, then ... with a lower average ... have been able to com... year."

Feminist Forum

by Lee Craig

The third annual Feminist Research Forum, sponsored by the Women's Research Centre, will be held September 21 and 22.

Eileen Morouney, coordinator for the forum, said the forum is being held because of "a desire for women to get together and share research, which we hope can then be integrated into the community."

Morouney stressed the importance of feminist research being recognized. "Our aim is for this information to be presented to students, faculty, and other women in the community, to provide a more open atmosphere.

Dr. Jeri Wine of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education will be present Friday night at the opening of the forum. Dr. Wine's main research involves the study of violence against women.

Also present Friday will be Jane Karstaedt, of the Edmonton Sexual Assault Centre.

The forum will take place in the Education North Building, Room 2-115, 6:00-9:30 Friday evening and 8:00 am-4:45 pm Saturday.

FUNNY ABOUT LOVE

Young free spirit Mary Stuart Masterson (inset) further complicates the troubled marriage of Gene Wilder and Christine Lahti.

FOR GENE WILDE

ROMANCE IS N

LAUGHING MATTE

Duffy and Meg are an unusual '90s couple — they're happily married. That is, until Meg decides she wants to have children. Then Duffy has a typical '90s problem — he's not sure what he wants.

Funny About Love is a romantic comedy starring Gene Wilder as Duffy Bergman, a political cartoonist living in New York City. His wife, Meg (Christine Lahti), is a successful restaurateur who believes their affluent yuppie lifestyle will only be complete when baby makes three. Duffy is not convinced that parenthood is the right option for them.

Ironically, as Meg is forced to concentrate on her career, Duffy becomes more and more convinced of the joy of having babies.

Unfortunately, love isn't enough to patch-up this confused couple's differences.

Enter Daphne Delillo, a woman young enough to be Duffy's daughter. Daphne (Mary Stuart Masterson) is a free spirit; she is vivacious and uninhibited. The mutual attraction of Daphne and Duffy make anything and everything possible. Isn't love a funny thing?

Funny About Love is directed by Leonard Nimoy (Three Men and a Baby, Star Trek III and IV). He says, "Duffy is a guy who should have grown up some time ago — but like so many of us, he has to be dragged kicking and screaming into maturity."

Gene Wilder is at his best playing men who haven't quite grown up. From The Woman in Red (which also featured Wilder's late wife Gilda Radner) and Young Frankenstein to his Academy-award-nominated role in The Producers, Wilder is also a master of physical comedy.

Funny About Love is a change for him, requiring a more subtle and psychological approach. "This comedy is different from anything I've done before," says Wilder. "Duffy is a character who is ruled by instinct and emotion."

Meg (Lahti) is the more rational of the two. Lahti has only recently made the transition to comedy roles. Prior to Funny About Love and Gross Anatomy, she was featured in such dramatic fi Running on Empty and Wi Life is it, Anyway?

Mary Masterson (Immediate Family, Some of Wonderful) completes Fa About Love's triangle. Her character exudes such joie vivre that she forces the ne serious Duffy into redesigni love life and rethinking his

WELCOME HOME ROXY CARMICHAEL

High school can be a living hell. But everything does get sorted out in the end. Jocks, debs and assorted snobs become zeros and look back on school as the best time in their lives. Meanwhile the dweebs, quiet and "different" kids who are quite fit in, are often rewarded for their offbeat gifts and talents. Every headline or trophy winner, their triumph over their former cool schoolmates.

Winona Ryder has experienced the transition earlier than most. The girl with incredibly big eyes gave up high school to start tutoring and motion picture stardom.

Sometimes it'll be talking with friend, Helene, who's still back in school," she says. "I think, 'I would be fun to be like Helene, being on the track team and going to the Valentine's Day dance and stuff like that. But then I know I don't really have it in me to be the social thing. I was always more the geeky.'"

It takes sense, then, that the girl who is Winona, Minn., has shone brightly playing the teen outsider who sees through the phoniness in roles such as Lydia, the film-obsessed teen who befriends the ghosts in Beetlejuice, the rebel high-school student who leads the ruthless clique of girls in Heathers.

Dubbing her the "voice of reason" in the films, Rolling Stone magazine enthused that Ryder "is just wacky enough to get the hang of modern life and savvy enough to play against it."

Once again plays the voice of reason, albeit a somewhat different voice, in Welcome Home, Roxy Carmichael. The film, directed by Jim Abrahams (Airplane!, Police Academy), looks at the transition from high school to college from several angles.

The almost-unseen Roxy named Carmichael is a former high-school queen in a nondescript small Ohio town called Clyde. But after leaving Clyde, Roxy becomes a huge star, and you brag about having had a homecoming, even if you were snubbed her.

When Roxy briefly returns to Clyde to lend her name to the Carmichael Center for Biology and Drama, the story goes mad — each for his own reasons.

The ensuing ersatz society crowd, it's an opportunity to display what they've for finery. For town straight-arrow Denton Webb (Jeff Daniels), it's an uncomfortable reunion with a woman whose child he fathered in high school. And for the iconoclastic Dinky Bossetti (Ryder), a teenaged orphan who rejects Clyde just as Roxy did decades earlier, it's a chance to meet the woman who embodies all her dreams.

Distractions abound — such as guidance counsellors and fickle would-be boyfriends — but the appeal of a major celebrity whose life seems to parallel her own is irresistible. "I think what attracted me to play Dinky was her honesty," explains Ryder. "She says whatever she thinks to the point where it is shocking. The route Dinky chooses to find herself is a very original one. I identified with Dinky and understand her desire to be accepted on her own terms."

And as for Roxy? "She was an eccentric and an outcast. And it's interesting to see how people's attitudes toward her have changed."

Welcome Home, Roxy Carmichael opens Friday, October 12th at theatres across Canada.

Feminist Forum

by Lee Craig

The third annual Feminist Research Forum, sponsored by the Women's Research Centre, will be held September 21 and 22.

Eileen Morouney, coordinator for the forum, said the forum is being held because of "a desire for women to get together and share research, which we hope can then be integrated into the community."

Morouney stressed the importance of feminist research being recognized. "Our aim is for this information to be presented to students, faculty, and other women in the community, to provide a more open atmosphere.

Dr. Jeri Wine of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education will be present Friday night at the opening of the forum. Dr. Wine's main research involves the study of violence against women.

Also present Friday will be Jane Karstaedt, of the Edmonton Sexual Assault Centre.

The forum will take place in the Education North Building, Room 2-115, 6:00-9:30 Friday evening and 8:00 am-4:45 pm Saturday.

THE LONG WALK HOME

Academy Award-winner Sissy Spacek is Miriam Thompson, and Whoopi Goldberg is Odessa Cotter in director Richard Pearce's "The Long Walk Home." The story is set in Montgomery, Alabama in 1955, where the black boycott of public transportation forever alters American society and changes the lives of Miriam, a white housewife, and her black maid Odessa. Miriam defies her husband Norman, for whom the division of races is an unquestioned fact of life, by driving Odessa to and from work during the boycott. White resistance to the boycott intensifies and grows violent, but because of her love and respect for Odessa, and because she has learned to challenge all that she has ever been taught about black and white, Miriam now gives her total support to the struggle for integration.

Close's Oscar-nominated performance in Barry Levinson's Diner was the highlight of her career. Despite a reputation for being difficult on the set, Close has starred in a number of critically acclaimed films, including The World According to Garp, The Natural and Fatal Attraction. Her performance in the latter, playing a woman driven to the point of madness by a married lover, earned her an Academy Award nomination. It is a crying round of "more-ghastly-than-Glenn-Close" parts. But again, Close doted 'em with an all-encompassing portrayal of a tragic heroine.

Close's Oscar-nominated performance in Fatal Attraction is a textbook example of how to play a character that is not only unsympathetic, but downright unlikeable. I think that's because I think Close is a good actress who is not afraid to take risks with her characters. She's not afraid to look bad, to be unlikeable, to be unsympathetic. She's not afraid to be ugly. She's not afraid to be human.

But when it comes to understanding what makes Glenn tick, she's as much a mystery as ever.

Feminist Forum

by Lee Craig

The third annual Feminist Research Forum, sponsored by the Women's Research Centre, will be held September 21 and 22.

Eileen Morouney, coordinator for the forum, said the forum is being held because of "a desire for women to get together and share research, which we hope can then be integrated into the community."

Morouney stressed the importance of feminist research being recognized. "Our role is to bring information to be presented to students, faculty, and other women in the community, to provide a more open atmosphere."

Dr. Jeri Wine of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education will be present Friday night at the opening of the forum. Dr. Wine's main research involves the study of violence against women.

Also present Friday will be Jane Karstadt, of the Edmonton Sexual Assault Centre.

The forum will take place in the Education North Building, Room 2-115, 6:00-9:30 Friday evening and 8:00 am - 4:45 pm Saturday.

MEMPHIS BELLE

A SOARING WWII ADVENTUR

Clew members (from left: Billy Zeta, Matthew Modine, Tate Donovan and D.B. Sweeney) pass by the bomber a crucial bombing mission.

The setting is war-torn England.

Memphis Belle, a B-17 bomber, is about to depart on her 25th mission over enemy territory.

Fortress bombers to North Africa and Europe.

The film stars a cross section of America's brightest actors and newcomers.

Memphis Belle directed by Michael Caton-Jones (Scandal) is a historically accurate war movie, inspired by William Wyler's 1944 documentary about the exploits of the Memphis Belle and her crew.

Wyler actually flew on the missions with the Belle to get his footage.

The film stars a cross section of America's brightest actors and newcomers including Matthew Modine (Married to the Mob) heads the cast as the B-17 pilot and a huge publicity campaign is underway to make Memphis Belle as realistic as possible. For instance, crew members of the film will live in the same barracks as the actors did during their training. Producer David Puttnam sought out the original crew members to be technical advisors on the film.

Director Lewis Gilbert (Damocles Of Fire, The Mission) has assembled a cast of 24 actors and actresses to portray the crew of the Memphis Belle.

Gilbert has cast Matthew Modine as Captain Dennis Dearborn, the pilot of the Belle and the crew's favorite. Modine's character is the one who arrives on the British base to orchestrate the return of the Belle and her crew to America.

Tate Donovan (Clean and Sober) plays Clay Thomas, the co-pilot of the Belle.

Eric Stoltz (Mask), D. B. Sweeney (Fatman and Robin) and Billy Zane (Dead Poets Society) are members of the Belle's crew.

Lt. Colonel Harry Crosby (Two-time Oscar nominee John Lithgow (The World According to Garp, Terms of Endearment) plays the public-relations officer who arrives on the British base to orchestrate the return of the Belle and her crew to America.

It's all part of a huge publicity campaign to stimulate war-bond sales and renew flagging morale. But first, the bomber has to survive the deadly German attacks.

ents at Michener Park are ed at Housing and Food s' recent decision to allow dents to reside in Galbraith use Michener Park shares community feeling among students and their families, ko believes that Housing od Services are alienating who are living there. "I do lieve a mixed community in what is exclusively a student housing community is safe to raise our children," he said.

're very upset about this," vid Lazechko, a represen- of the Michener Park Com- Association (M.C.P.A.) who at the MPCA should have nsulted with earlier about cision.

However, Lazechko insists that he is not being unreasonable. With 45 vacancies in Galbraith House, he is perfectly aware that there is indeed a money crunch. "All we're looking for is better communication between the two parties where it would make Michener Park an enjoyable community," said Lazechko. He trusts that long-term goals should be addressed so that things can be worked out to the mutual benefit and advantage of both sides.

Director of Housing and Food Services, David Bruch, said that this is an emergency situation where the vacancies must be filled immediately.

According to Bruch, considerable efforts have been made to try to get students to move into Galbraith House. However, the group of possible residences for students has dried up. 45 vacancies translates to $19,000 per month and that is a serious loss of revenue. "The decision of the move is a reaction to a specific issue of the day. The solution we are proposing is not a long-term major change to policy," said Bruch. Non-students who may move into Galbraith House will sign a 10-month lease until August 31 1991.

Bruch believes that the MPCA is angry because they felt they were not consulted enough about the decision.

"Our department is committed to discuss issues with students but every now and then, something happens when there is not a lot of room for discussion," said Bruch. Ultimately, he feels that the University should not have to carry the cost and that options have to be pursued to alleviate the financial crisis.

Housing and Transport Commissioner, Jody Wilson is sympathetic to the MPCA's position, and feels that placing non-students in Michener Park residences who do not have a tie or moral obligation to the University is disruptive to the Community.

"Non-students may not understand the pressures students will face during mid-term week and finals," says Wilson. Her biggest concern is that if non-students are allowed to live in Michener Park, that proportion may expand, thereby causing dissatisfied students to evacuate the premises altogether.

In a meeting that occurred September 18 between Housing and Food Services and the MPCA, the option of placing non-academic University staff in Galbraith House was raised. The MPCA has also suggested that Housing and Food Services check the references of potential occupants.

can document the presence dents at every one of the ngs that this was discussed said.

nes was not satisfied with gument, pointing out that of the student members of FCLC had been elected.

"There are exactly two types of student representatives in University governing bodies," Downes said.

"There are students who have been selected by students and students who have been picked because of who they know."

Downes said that in many cases the views held by appointed student committee members are not representative of the views held by the majority of students on campus.

"You can't say that just by having a student on the committee that students were consulted. You have to have students who are representing — as much as possible — the general will of the student population. In this case, this means elected representatives," he said.

Students' Union president Suresh Mustapha agreed that important decisions should not be made without the input of elected student representatives, but he rejected the implication that appointed representatives should be denied a role in the decision making process.

Instead of replacing all appointed representatives with elected ones, Mustapha suggested the authority of appointed representatives be restricted.

"The problem is that they gave a very important responsibility to a committee that works on the periphery of the structure," he said.

"If we have a committee making important decisions like the reduction of library hours, that committee should be returned to a committee that has more broad-based student representation, like the GFC."

With this suggestion in mind, Mustapha plans to introduce a motion to the GFC asking that all GFCLC proposals be approved by the entire council before being enacted.

This change would ensure input from the elected student representatives who sit as members of the GFC.

Pembina plans open house

by Lee Craig

The Friends of Pembina will be holding an Open House this Saturday to celebrate the history of the residence.

The volunteer organization is expecting visits from alumni, many of whom are former Pembina residents, as well as the general public during Open House, which runs from 10 am - 4 pm. Photographs from the archives will be displayed along with tours of the building for all interested visitors.

Of their organization, Mahdis Dorkalam, spokesperson for the group, says, "We are interested in preserving and maintaining Pembina as a student's residence. All of us are extremely proud of the history of our building and this Open House is to share the building with other members of the University community."

Dorkalam added, "The most interesting part of the day will be the alumni that attend. Alumni are able to tell us how the University used to be. For example, last year we had a 1929 graduate at the Open House, so I hope people will stop by for refreshment and talk with the graduates of earlier days."

Originally intended as a women's residence, Pembina was built in 1914, but stood incomplete until 1916. Following this, Pembina became a temporary hospital to handle the influenza epidemic of this time. Finally in 1919, it regained its original purpose and became a women's residence which lasted to 1974.

At this time, Pembina was closed as the University had concerns over the safety of the building. Its future as a residence was in question, but students, alumni and faculty conducted a campaign to keep Pembina open as a student's residence. Since 1975, it has existed as a coed residence for mature students.

Feminist Forum

by Lee Craig

The third annual Feminist Research Forum, sponsored by the Women's Research Centre, will be held September 21 and 22.

Eileen Morouney, coordinator for the forum, said the forum is being held because of "a desire for women to get together and share research, which we hope can then be integrated into the community."

Morouney stressed the importance of feminist research being recognized. "Our aim is for this information to be presented to students, faculty, and other women in the community, to provide a more open atmosphere."

Dr. Geri Wine of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education will be present Friday night at the opening of the forum. Dr. Wine's main research involves the study of violence against women.

Also present Friday will be Jane Karstaedt, of the Edmonton Sexual Assault Centre.

The forum will take place in the Education North Building. Room 2-115. 6:00-9:30 Friday evening and 8:00 am-4:45 pm Saturday.

Students forced to remedy LOE deficiency

Barbara Beck

udents hoping to transfer into faculty of Arts may be facing culties in the future
e result of budget cutbacks enrollment problems, they no longer be accepted into program with a language other English (LOE) deficiency. efore this year, students who ired to the faculty were aled to clear the deficiency ra" to their degree by taking ntroductory second language
rse. This is no longer the case.
ective January 1990, all applits including non-matriculated rts were required to present
LOE at the time of application rder to be accepted.

"The gate clanged down in 1989/90," said Dr. Lynn Penrod, Associate Dean of Academic Programs and Undergraduate Studies for the Faculty of Arts. "Admission requirements are now very rigid."

In the past, the introductory second language courses have been offered to students as a way to make up their LOE deficiencies. Because these courses were being overloaded with students attempting to complete their LOE deficiency, the demand increased substantially, and the faculty was having difficulty offering enough of these sections to facilitate the demand. Since students have the opportunity to complete these requirements in high school, Faculty of Arts Dean, Dr. P.D. Clements feels that the faculty's decision was a necessary one.

"The question we should be asking is that when times get tough around here, should the U of A be doing the high schools' teaching?" she said.

According to Cheryl Dunbar, Assistant to the Associate Dean of Academic Programs and Undergraduate Studies, these changes should not have any adverse effect on matriculated applicants who apply directly out of high school. Those students, she said, had been given notice that the changes would be occuring.

"The high schools were given three years warning," Dunbar said.

However, some students presently enrolled in other faculties at the U of A were not aware of these changes, and were therefore surprised to find that their applications for transfer had been turned down. Education student Celeste Urion learned the hard way after her application to transfer into the Faculty of Arts was refused.

"I wasn't admitted on the basis that I needed a second language," she said. "I figured that as long as I had a year of university, it wouldn't matter. It is bothersome, because I don't want to be in the Faculty of Education."

Celeste will remain in the Faculty of Education for an extra year in order to fill her LOE deficiency before attempting to transfer into Arts again next September.

Other students may find themselves in similar positions - staying in their faculties for another year simply to make up their LOE deficiencies, in order to transfer into Arts next September. Dean Clements is hoping this is not the case.

"I think that would be most unfortunate," she said. "We are not able to guess how many this would affect."

Cheryl Dunbar added an analysis will be conducted by the Faculty of Arts to determine the impact of these changes.

uncil. Morrall, who is also the dents' Union Club Commissioner, said that various groups and individuals from across campus had brought environmental proposals to the council.

"We especially need more feedback from students," said Morrall. She stressed the need for more student input into the Council and environmental issues at the U of A.

One of the projects being examined by the council is an "enviro-kit" containing reusable plastic cups, plates and cutlery. The "enviro-kit" would be used at L'Express Restaurant in SUB, and possibly at other private University food outlets pending approval by individual merchants said Morrall. She added that the "enviro-kit" project is being coordinated with the University of Calgary and could begin within a year.

The Environment Council has proposed several other initiatives including cross-campus environmental audits and a recycling program for the University's Student residences. The Council is also promoting Car Free Day on September 26th and Environment Action Week to be held November 4th to 9th.

Morrall pointed out that Environment Council meetings are open to anybody interested in watching the proceedings every Wednesday at 7 in room 606 SUB.

Of the shift in graduate students enrollment Meekison said, "I don't know what the cause of the increase in part-time students is. Until we study the numbers of the last five years and see a trend, it is hard to say."

Other problems plaguing library

by Gil McGowan

Last Tuesday evening, during the "study-in" organized by the Students' Union to protest reduced library hours, the U of A's chief librarian, Ernie Ingles, agreed to meet at least a few of the students' demands. In particular, Mr. Ingles promised to keep Cameron Library open until midnight on weeknights.

After this announcement had been made many of the students gathered in Rutherford library appeared relieved. They were satisfied that their concerns had at least been partially addressed. But should students be satisfied with this concession? Should they now be willing to put the issue of the library out of their minds?

In my opinion, the answer to these questions should be an emphatic NO! Now that students have acted successfully to protect accessibility they should move on to attack other problems that have been plaguing the library. More specifically, they should demand that action be taken to stop the deterioration of our library's book collections.

Since the mid-eighties, the library's acquisition budget has been eroded relentlessly. Cut-backs have been so severe, in fact, that the University will spend $6 million less on new books this year than it did in 1983-84. Without the best possible collection of books and periodicals the U of A's ability to serve its students and attract good scholars will be diminished.

The blame for those cut-backs does not lie with the U of A's administration but with the federal and provincial governments.

On the federal level, funding problems began years ago but worsened last year when the government announced in its budget for 1990 that transfer payments for medicare and advanced education would be slashed dramatically.

Here in Alberta the situation has been much the same. Despite government promises that advanced education is its highest priority, spending on advanced education decreased by 26 per cent in inflation adjusted dollars while overall spending increased 14 per cent. Alberta, in fact, contributes a smaller percentage of it GDP to advanced education than any other province.

So what can be done? Demonstrate! Last Tuesday we discovered that the wishes of a large and vocal group of students could not easily be ignored. We should all take this lesson to heart. If we don't, there might come a day when the only periodicals available in the library are Time and Alberta Report.

Opposition to library cutbacks

The hours at the John W. Scott Health Sciences Library have recently been drastically cut. The new hours represent a reduction of 21 hours per week from the Scott Library hours during the 1989-90 academic year. Given the already critical shortage of study space available to medical students in the W.C. Mackenzie Health Services Center and surrounding buildings, I feel that this situation is unacceptable and that longer library hours must be quickly reinstated.

These cutbacks in hours hit medical students particularly hard. Our workload is one of the highest in any program, undergraduate or graduate, at the University of Alberta. Our lecture schedule generally precludes us from studying during regular working hours on weekdays. Thus, our prime studying times are evenings and weekends — the exact times that the 21 hours have been cut from. Keeping the library closed during these hours will make it virtually impossible for many medical students to study as much as necessary to achieve academic excellence. The result will be a dramatic drop in the standard of medical education at the U of A. This is unacceptable.

This situation is not affecting medical students alone. Library hours across campus have been subjected to severe cuts. Students in all faculties have been adversely affected and I strongly encourage all students to lobby for a return to reasonable library hours.

The decision to cut library hours was a rash one. Yes, funding to the libraries is tight. Yes, some cuts in services will undoubtably result. However, there are many budgeting alternatives less damaging than library closing. For example, some library services can be cut during non-peak hours. Also, not all floors of all libraries need to be open at times when the libraries are being used primarily for studying. Finally, funds from other sources (both within the libraries and externally) can and should be redirected to keep the libraries open.

The new hours are already in effect at the Scott Library. This means that the situation is urgent. Immediate action must be taken to reinstate longer library hours.

ink that the University ad-ration has been rather stu-bout the library hours cut-. Get me straight, though-t passing judgement on the on itself, just on how it was ed. The reason why I refuse ack or defend the decision is that the rationale behind ision (presuming that there was one!) has been lost. e are too busy complaining t how the library reductions s students to listen to nations of why it may be a idea.

ybe the University of Alberta ny body is simply spoiled. he last decade or so, this tion was under the guiding hand of Myer Horowitz—a man the opportunity to discuss changes or to prepare for them. As a result, the only thing the current administration is likely to see coming from students is anger.

"the new administration seems much colder and more secretive" who seemed to value communication, and who tried to remain open to the ideas of student and staff. The new administration, on the other hand, seems much colder and more secretive. Students are not given this will, of course, only reinforce the inclination to keep decisions from those whom they most seriously affect, until it is too late to change or improve them.

Students are not mushrooms, nor are they stupid. The people who populate the halls and classrooms of this institution are some of the future planners and designers of our world. It does not seem unreasonable to give them the benefit of the doubt and allow them the space to contribute to decisions that will affect the students of today and those of tomorrow. If people are given the time and space to discuss a decision rationally, it is easier for them to understand the need for such a decision, and in many cases, to find alternatives that may work better for all involved. When people are handed last-minute proclamations, it's not hard to see why anger is the result. Many students have planned their study and work schedules meticulously around library hours. If they had been warned at the beginning of the summer that this change was going to take effect in the fall, students would have planned for it. As it is now, all people can do is react.

This summer, the Students' Union attempted to approach the University's problems in a cooperative manner. Last-minute decisions, such as the reduction in library hours, make it very difficult to justify a non-adversarial approach when it comes to dealing with the university administration. The University has enough problems on its hands without people wasting their time and energy on hiding decisions from each other and then screaming about the them.

Gateway elicits puke

It seems to me that newspapers, whether they be The Globe and Mail or The Gateway, provide an essential service to people. The production of a newspaper should not be taken lightly, at the very least the production deadlines should be met.

As astounding as it may seem, the University newspaper informs students of ongoings at the University (this is sarcasm, folks). Not The Gateway! Their Tuesday, September 18th edition was actually released on Wednesday, September 19th to the majority of the student body. The cover story entailed the plans of the Students' Union to hold a library protest on, ironically, the 18th of September. Luckily, I found this out Wednesday morning, one day too late. Being an avid user at the library, I found it upsetting that many people like myself were in total ignorance of the library sit-in, due to the tardiness of The Gateway.

I want to thank The Gateway for profesionally reporting news and events that are about to happen after they have happened. The great convenience about most newspapers is that they are current, not outdated. The newspaper is not a toy to be published at a whim. Take it seriously. If you can't publish it on time, don't bother doing it at all, because it's a waste of time, money, and resources. You amateur journalists and publishers make me puke.

r of the problem, but for the le reason that I am not a member of "the" bureaucratic hierarchy, my abilities are limited. I'm trying to get through to the Big Guy, but he doesn't want to talk to me. So, let's talk.

the Dr.

Dear Dr. Jimmy,

Why can I tell a first year student on sight? I can't place the reason for this. Was I like this in 1982?

Eternal Student

Eternal,

Yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, yes you were as were all of us. It's a wonder, isn't it, how we can immediately spot the loneliness and insecurity stapled onto the faces of these pathetic people. They do things like chew Hubba Bubba in our classes and wear neon baseball caps. They still think stalling the professor from real progress is cool. But don't pick on them — you were one too!

Dear Dr. Jimmy,

tudents set record straight

September 18th issue of Gateway carries a letter rning the court action nen the GSA and the rsity. While, like everyone MR Tim Woolley is entitled opinion, his letter contains al inaccuracies about the The fee in question, the nuous Registration Fee rear's terminology) is paid l graduate students, once reach a certain period in program.

like undergraduates, whose or a year are based on the es they take, graduate nts pay a program fee ly $747 per term, on top of neral fees. This program payable for a fixed number nesters, depending on the idual graduate program. this time has expired, the nt pays a post-program fee. ourt case is over this post-am fee.

t year the fee, known as the nuous Registration Fee 52 per term. This year the s $249 per term. The ersity administration has ed to divide the fee into two , applying to different es of students. The CRF per n, according to this year's ndar, applies, as Mr. Woolley states, to graduate students who are continuing their graduate programs off campus. The newly named Minimum Instruction Fee applies to all graduate students continuing their programs, who have paid their program fees already. These students may be taking courses or completing their graduate program. Thus the majority of students affected by the increase are not 'working or taking a holiday' but are continuing their graduate program. These students are receiving instruction, either through supervision of research or through courses. Thus the GSA believes that this is a fee for instruction, subject to a maximum increase of 15% in any one year. For this reason we are challenging the legality of the increase.

Jackie Stavely
GSA VP Communications

Letters continued to p.11

Tim J. Woolley obviously does not understand the issue of increased instructional fees for graduate students. In his letter to The Gateway, Wooley states that the increased fees don't matter, because "the students are out working or taking a holiday during this period."

This statement is completely untrue. The continuing registration fee applies to graduate students who have paid the required tution (three years for a PhD) and are completing their research or writing their thesis. These students are no longer taking courses, and so should not be paying tution. Graduate students are, in fact, a cheap source of labour for the University, both as teaching assistants, and as research assistants. Considering that the stipends for graduate students have not increased accordingly, the tuition hike could be quite a hardship for students, especially foreign students and those supporting families. Other universities across Canada have much lower continuing registration fees, or do not charge tuition at all to those employed as graduate assistants. If the U of A continues to treat its graduate students this way, it will certainly become more difficult to attract new students.

eith really pissed off

, it's that time of year we all come back to school nd out what changes (for or worse) have occured we were plugging away at mmer jobs. The intent of ster is not to prove a ior command of the language, but rather to bout happenings on and campus that piss me off. no particular order, here is ch list:

G. Paul Skelhorne, our in-Chief, recently wrote a n complaining that CJSR play bands such as Rush, alen, and AC/DC. C'mon l, I'm as big a Rush fan as , but these bands do not on an alternative station. want to hear this music, e K-97 and if it doesn't live ts AOR format, it's not up R to pick up their slack!

ll summer, the Edmonton ji had the U of A's al woes splattered over nt page of the City section. re these people trying to retty soon, prospective vers will be saying, "Oh aduated from the U of A. hat the place where the of education sunk below epths of the North chewan?" Who's to ? President Paul port seems to be taking a heat, but I don't think that fficit occured overnight.

(3) The library is collecting more fees and cutting its services. Does this make any sense? We have to give full support to our Students' Union, so they can support us.

(4) Once again, there are tuition increases that could choke a mastodon. A big "hurrah" for the GSA and SU for taking money grubbing systems to court.

Trekkies: "Get a life"

In response to Howard Roang's letter on September 18, concerning his consternation at the shot at Star Trek in the Space Moose cartoon, I can only say, "Get a life."

I believe I read an article about a convention not too long ago where William Shatner (a.k.a. Captain James T. Kirk in case you've been living on a desert island for the past fifteen years) said exactly the same thing to a crowd of convention attendees. What would lead the actor to "insult" his devoted fans in such a way? Questions like "What was your motivation when you kissed that woman in such and such an episode after..." might have something to do with it.

Try not to forget that, while Star Trek has a tremendous following of devoted fans, it is just entertainment. And despite the ever-increasing popularity of the show, the actors who play the roles are mere men and women.

Create your own future

At IBM, you'll be encouraged to pursue your goals, to break new ground and truly create your own future.

Here's what some recent graduates have been doing.

"At IBM, the education you receive is excellent. I spent most of my first six months in classrooms. I received technical training to help prepare me for the application development work I'm now doing and business training to help me understand the IBM company. I've also been exposed to different business areas such as: leasing, proposal and contract management. If you want it — there is lots of opportunity to learn."

Tsae-Ling Ho
University of Alberta

"I was responsible for creating the demonstrations for the IBM PS/2 display at a major computer show. This included working with developers to design software to run on prototype hardware, presenting to IBM vice presidents and meeting strict deadlines. Being responsible for all aspects of the project made it both challenging and very appealing to me."

Bill Evelyn
University of Calgary

"I work in an area that deals with everything a customer needs to know to use IBM products — from user manuals to hypertext systems and intelligent online help screens. We're looking at new ways of developing information, working closely with our customers to make sure we understand what they need. It's exciting setting the direction for something that was never done before."

Judy Escott
University of Saskatchewan

At IBM, the future is yours.

HUMOUR

Friday night at La Bar

by Kisa Mortenson

Ever say the words, "I was a designated driver?" It was Friday and I was out to stay sober. Andrew and Bob (a.k.a. Dandy Andy and Happy Bob), on the other hand, were out to get silly. Dandy Andy and Happy Bob were convinced that for a complete and balanced diet, beer, beer, and more beer was a definite must. Forget Wheaties...forget Wayne's Pro-Stars...beer really gave these guys that extra "umph" (energy) to dance. And could these guys dance... With his energy and slight lack of balance, Dandy Andy wasn't too selective in his choice of dance partners and did the bump with some hairy man on the dance floor.

"Bob must have made it safely into a bed on the south side"

Luckily, I was there to cut in and prevent some weird, primitive and territorial war dance from occurring. Phew... It was getting late and I was tired, so I waited outside in my car for the two amigos. If Happy Bob and Dandy Andy didn't leave soon, they'd be tap dancing to Madonna's Vogue or doing the Mexican Hat Dance around a bottle of Corona. At last, they emerged from La Bar and got into La Car of La Designated Driver (me!).

Problem 1:

How do you drive two drunks home? First, decide which way is north and which way is south. Happy Bob couldn't quite figure it out. While Happy Bob pointed north and said to drive south, I drove sober south.

Problem 2:

How do you keep two happy and very friendly drunks from talking to everybody you drive by? You don't...Happy Bob and Dandy Andy had their heads and whatever else they could fit through the window, hanging out of the car. They asked the oh-so-cool-45-year-old-in-the-red-pinto where the party was. At least, I know where to party in about 25 years.

Problem 3:

How do you know if you've dropped the drunk off at the right house? You d Andy and I watche cross the fence t house and that w saw of him. I watch the next day for possible peeping T Bob must have mad a bed somewhere side.
